Bosnia's warring factions agreed Wednesday in Geneva on a month-long cease-fire starting Friday to allow time for United Nations mediators to pursue a longer truce.

The one-month limit seemed to underline the limited ability of the international community to find a solution to the 26-month conflict or to impose a halt to the fighting despite the in-volvement of both the United States and Russia in the peace negotiations.

Yasushi Akashi, the UN mediator and special envoy to the former Yugoslavia, spent five days trying to get the two factions to the negotiating table and had pushed for a four-month halt to the fighting.

The agreement reached, reminiscent of so many failed cease-fires with no provisions for enforcement, failed to mention either a separation of forces, the withdrawal of heavy weapons or the interposition of UN troops to assure that the two sides adhere to the agreement. When the foreign ministers of the United States, Russia and the major European countries met in Geneva on May 13 they issued a solemn declaration saying such measures were essential and that any cease-fire should last at least four months with a provision for an exten-

The ministers are scheduled to meet again in Geneva on Sunday to review the work of their "contact group," which has been trying to devise a peace plan based on the partition of Bosnia between a Bosnian Serbian republic and the newly established Muslim-Croatian federation. Those two entities are supposed to stay united in a loose union.

The Muslim-led Bosnian government is now particularly reluctant to accept the kind of cease-fire that American, Russian and European foreign ministers are proposing. It fears the real intent of all the Western powers, including its closest ally, the United States, is to freeze the war for good at a time when the Bosnian Serbs occupy more than 70 percent of the country.

The Bosnian Muslims, gaining steadily in shipments and their new federation with the Croats, want to keep open their option of trying to regain by war more of the land they have lost to the Bosnian Serbs.

They have doubts that the international community has the will to force the Bosnian Serbs to withdraw from any of the lands they now hold, even if there is a peace agreement on the basis of the partition plan now being discussed that would give the Muslim-Croatian federation 51 percent of Bosnia. Under that partition plan, the Bosnian Serbs theoretically would have to surrender more than 20 percent of their current holdings.

The United States has joined Russia and the European Union in backing the 51-49 partition plan but laid down many conditions for any participation of U.S. troops in a UN peacekeeping force to carry it out.

The skepticism about Wednesday's agreement was reflected in comments made by the Bosnian Serbian leader, Radovan Karadzic who called it "modest" and noted that none of the previous cease-fires had worked.

He had been insisting initially on a yearlong cease-fire and then lowered his demand to four months before finally accepting just one month, which was the initial Bosnian government pro-

Mr. Akashi said of the cease-fire: "What we got was certainly less than what I tried to get at the outset, which was for at least a four-month agreement on cessation of hostilities. But under the circumstances such a more-ambitious undenaking was not within reach."

The cease-fire document said that "as a first step" both sides agreed not to engage in offensive military operations "or other provocative actions of any kind" for one month starting Friday at noon.

Japanese Deal a Blow To U.S. Effort on Korea

${\it Tokyo Fears Sanctions May Prompt}$ Uprisings in Its Korean Community

SEOUL - The Clinton administration's effort to force North Korea to pay a swift, high price for its continued deliance of nuclear inspectors has run into another major roadblock, with Japan balking at sanctions that would require a quick cutoff of the hundreds of mil-lions of dollars that flow from its shores to the Communist government in Pyongyang.

Combined with China's reluctance to exert greater pressure on North Korea, the sharp lebate between Tokyo and Washington threatens to greatly reduce the pain inflicted on the government of Kim II Sung. Officials in several countries in Northeast

Asia say the Japanese have privately said they are worried about possible uprisings or terrorism by their own Korean population, and fear that the cutoff of the North's biggest supply of hard currency could lead to widespread suffer-ing among the North Korean people. Though estimates vary greatly, intelligence agencies believe that Koreans living in Japan send $600 million to $1.8 billion to Pyongyang every year, a huge figure in a country whose gross domestic product is about $20 billion.

Japan has publicly said that it will abide by any sanctions approved by the United Nations Security Council, including a cutoff of financial transfers, as long as the action is permissible under the Japanese Constitution. But in private, officials say, Tokyo has been arguing against an American plan that would set a deadline for North Korea to open up for full inspections and impose a cutoff of financial transfers among the first set of sanctions if the North refused to comply. Instead, Japan wants to issue another warning, with vague promises of later sanctions. Unlike the American plan, Japan's proposal calls for a much later attempt at cutting off the funds, if North Korea continues to obstruct inspections of sites where it is suspected of developing nuclear weapons.

"We are in agreement on the overall goal of bringing the North Koreans back to the negotiating table," a senior Japanese official involved in the issue said Wednesday. "But stopping the remittances of funds is a very heavy sanction. Our differences are over the weight of the sanctions and the timing."

Although officials on all sides say the differences are over tactics rather than strategy, the impact on American relations with its biggest ally in the Pacific could be considerable. The United States has supported Japan's bid to become a permanent member of the Security Council, and Tokyo's handling of the Korean crisis is widely regarded in Asia as the greatest test of its ability to take a leading role in a SECULTITY ISSUE.

A mishandling of the standoff could also bring down the fragile minority government of Prime Minister Tsutomu Hata, Mr. Hata has reportedly been arguing for a more aggressive stance by Japan, but the opposition Social Democratic Party, with long and deep links to North Korea, holds the deciding votes when a no-confidence resolution is presented in Parliament, perhaps as soon as this month.

In Seoul, by contrast, President Kim Young Sam has publicly taken a far harder line against the North than at any point in his 16 months in office. On Wednesday, at a first meeting of the country's National Security Council since 1988. Mr. Kim made it clear that he would not settle for anything less than a full accounting of what the North has done with its plutonium supplies over the past few years.

"Tensions on the Korean Peninsula are likely to remain for the time being," the president said. "North Korea's development of nuclear weapons is intended for use not against other countries but against South Korea, and thus their program should be stopped at any cost."

Government officials here said that "at any cost" did not include a military strike on the North's nuclear sites. "It's out of the question" a senior aide to Mr. Kim said Wednesday. He also discounted the possibility of a naval blockade, saying. "We are attempting to avoid doing anything that could be interpreted as warlike.

South Korea's biggest fear now, officials say, is that the North will try to stage an incident or set up a provocation. On Wednesday morning, for example, the North Korean official press agency quoted military sources as saying that the South has deployed new guns in the demilitarized zone and that it fired at a post in the North. A spokesman for South Korea's De-fense Ministry denied that any such activity had taken place. In the last few months, the Japanese govern-

U.S. and Europe Renew Bid To Forge Links With East

By William Drozdiak

ISTANBUL - The United States and its European allies embarked on a new effort Wednesday to formalize closer relations with Russia and other former adversaries in the East by linking them to the West's principal eco-nomic and military organizations, Secretary of State Warren M. Christopher, who arrived here Wednesday night for a meeting of NATO foreign ministers on how to build a closer military relationship with Moscow, told reporters aboard his plane that the latest initiative reflected President Bill Clinton's "vision of an undivided and integrated Europe

Besides working through NATO's program of military cooperation with Eastern countries, known as Partnership for Peace, the Clinton administration is pressing its European allies to open up their markets so that the economic partnership between East and West can be based more on trade rather than aid.

In Paris on Wednesday, Mr. Christopher joined his counterparts from the world's major industrialized nations in approving a new economic accord with Russia designed to expedite reforms and expand its pascent market economy. (Page 9)

In Istanbul, Mr. Christopher said the 16 nations of the North Atlantic Treaty Organiza-tion and nearly two dozen other countries from the defunct Soviet empire "will continue to develop the important network of relationships with our new partners" to the East "to strengthen the security and prosperity of an undivided, democratic Europe."

Last month, the Russian defense minister,

Pavel S. Grachev, told the NATO allies that his country was prepared to join the military cooperation plan that has been embraced by 20 other Eastern states, some of which see it as a stepping-stone to full NATO membership.

But General Grachev stressed that Russia

countries fear that granting exceptional status to Moscow or creating a special partnership would arouse suspicions among smaller Eastern states that Russia was being given an effective veto over their security interests. Mr. Christopher said it was important that

For Major, Vote For EU Deputies Could Be Omen

By William E. Schmidt New York Times Service

LONDON - Voters go to the polls Thursday to choose representatives to the European Parliament, but in Britain, at least, the outcome of the balloting will most likely tell less about Europe than the domestic political future of Prime Minister John Major.

At best, surveys say, only 4 in 10 voters will turn out, and even then British ballots will not be counted until Sunday, once voting is finishing in all 12 countries of the European Union.

Scam to Cost Creditors 4 Billion DM

Germany's third major financial scandal in little more than six months will hit banks and insurance companies with up to 4 bil-lion Deutsche marks in losses, prosecutors said Wednesday as they disclosed details of a scam in which senior managers of Balsam AG, a manufacturer of flooring, speculated in financial markets using borrowed funds.

Prosecutors estimated that Balsam owed 50 German and foreign banks as much as 1.6 billion DM ($960 million). A Wiesbadenbased factoring company that did business with Balsam faces an additional 2 billion DM loss. But no single bank is expected to lose more than 100 million DM, German banking sources said. The primary election results Tuesday set the stage for a Senate race in the fall that is very likely to set a record for campaign spending and is sure to be one of the most closely watched in the nation.

The stakes are unusually high because Democrats are fighting to keep control of the Senate and the Republicans would get a big boost if they stole an unexpected seat in California. If the Democrats lost in such a key state, it would send an ominous signal to the White House about President Bill Clinton's chances for re-election in 1996.

But the heightened awareness about this race is recent. Just a few months ago, Washington insiders and many California Democratic leaders were counting on Ms. Feinstein's re-election as one of the surest bets of 1994. She is still considered a formidable incumbent who. would be difficult to unseat. But today, campaign observers regard her race as a serious one.

Mr. Hullington, a businessman and newcomer to California, upset a veteran congressman in 1992. Mr. Huffington pounded his opponent with negative commercials and spent more than $5.2 million of his own money to set a national record for spending in a House campaign.

Based on his last campaign finance report and on recent television purchases, Mr. Huffington was expected to spend as much as $8 million of his own money on the primary. If so, that is already close to the record for the most personal money ever spent in a Senate race, set by Jay Rockefeller's $10 million when he won a seat from West Virginia in 1984. Ms. Feinstein has raised at least

$6 million. Thus, the candidates together are more than halfway to a record for the most expensive Senate race in history. The current record is $25.9 million, set in the race won by Senator Jesse Heims, Republican of North Carolina, in ernatorial race. St Treasurer Kathleen Brown cruised to victory in the Democratic primary and said she was eager to begin a long-awaited showdown with Governor Pete Wilson, a Republican.

Ms. Brown, 48, becomes the third Brown chosen by Democrats as their gubernatorial standardbearer in the last four decades. She rode a well-heeled bandwagon to victory over the insurance commissioner, John Garamendi, 48, and state Senator Tom Hayden, 54.

Her brother, Edmund G. (Jerry) Brown Ir. and her father, Edmund G. (Pat) Brown were governors of "The way I see it, we need to be on the floor in July," he said. Clinton Walks Oxford's Halls of Protest

By Ann Devroy

Washington Past Service
OXFORD, England — President Bill Clinton ended his D-Day tour of Europe on Wednesday with a nostalgic visit to Oxford University, defying the ghosts of his own biography to visit the campus where he struggled to avoid military service in Vietnam.

It was here, as a Rhodes Scholar in 1969, that Mr. Clinton wrote his now-famous letter to an ROTC officer in Arkansas, thanking him for "saving me from the draft." The authorities then abandoned plans for the president to walk in a procession after the ceremonies. instead, they ushered him into a limousine, keeping the protesters behind a tight line of police. The White House press secretary, Dee Dee Myers, said this visit was about "an important message the president has" for students here and elsewhere that is exactly right to end the D-Day observances: "Their generation needs to pick up the mantle and carry on," Mr. Clinton offered that message in brief remarks following the de-gree ceremony, mostly in Latin,

College Women Catch Up in Chugging

By Brooke A. Masters

Washington Past Service
WASHINGTON — The percentage of American college women who drink alcohol primarily to get drunk has tripled since the mid-1970s and now nearly equals the percentage of college men who drink for the same reason, according to a new report.

The National Commission on Substance Abuse at Colleges and Universities also reported that "binge drinking" - which it defines as at least five drinks in one night - is the worst substance-abuse problem among college students. The report concluded that alcohol is implicated in most major campus problems, including rape, other violent crimes, AIDS transmission and academic difficulties.

The commission was formed by Columbia University's Center on Addiction and Substance Abuse to examine collegiate substance use and make recommendations to administrators, parents and students. Last year, the group urged campuses to ban smoking. The report calls on colleges to shift the "campus culture away from accepting alcohol abuse." The commission also urged the federal gov-erament to fund more research on prevention and treatment programs and require college crime reports to note whether substance abuse was a factor.

The report, which compiled data from a wide range of national and regional studies, illustrates what a U.S. Circuit Court judge, Pamela Ann Rymer, a commission member, called an epidemic. These were among the commission's

• Forty-two percent of college students reported drinking heavily within the previous two weeks; the rate among their peers not in college

The report also found some groups of college students more at risk than others. White male students reported drinking the most, averaging nine drinks a week, followed by Latino men (5.8 drinks), white women (4.1 drinks), black men (3.6 drinks), and black women (1 drink).

Penn State's football coach, Joe Paterno, who was also a commission member, said he saw racial differences among athletes. "It's mostly a white football player problem," he said. "May-be the black student-athlete is more focused."

College men still drink heavily more often than women, according to the report. About 54 percent of men reported binge drinking in the previous two weeks, while 38 percent of women did. But Joseph Califano, president of the center that sponsored the commission, warned that the statistics on the number of drinks consumed may understate the problem for women.

"Alcohol has much more severe consequences for women," he said, citing medical studies. "Women are quicker to get cirrhosis of the liver and quicker to become addicted."

Most of the statistics in the report were drawn from a Department of Education survey of 58,000 students at 78 universities. The information on motives for drinking comes from studies by a Harvard University researcher.

U.S. Urging Force Of 3,000 for Haiti

By John M. Goshko

Washington Pass Service
WASHINGTON — The Clinton administration is urging allies to pledge troops for a proposed 3,000-member peacekeeping force that would move into Haiti and keep order if democracy is restored, a U.S. special envoy, William Gray, said Wednesday. The force "should be ready to deploy once the current military leadership in Haiti has departed, Mr. Gray said during testimony before the House Foreign Affairs The peacekeepers tentatively would have a broader mission than in past agreements, which foresaw a small contingent confined to training the Haitian armed forces after the deposed civilian president, the Reverend Jean-Bertrand Aristide, was returned to office.

As envisioned by U.S. planners, the force's mission would include taking over some police duties, while a corruption-free Haitian police force was being created.

The force would protect Father Aristide, the members of his government, human-rights monitors and representatives of humanitarian aid organizations. It would also gnard foreign embassies and such infrastructure as roads and water systems from attack or sabotage by supporters of the armed forces.

The force would consist of units from the United States and countries in the Western Hemisphere and Europe. Its purpose would be to prevent anarchy or civil war if the international community succeeds in forcing Haiti's military rulers from power. That would put American troops into a position reminiscent of the one encountered in Somalia, where attacks by hostile forces caused American deaths and led to congressional and public demands for U.S. withdrawal. Lawmakers have

The United States and France said they would contribute troops. Diplomats said U.S. lobbying at

President Bill Clin-ton has refused for the last month to rule out the possibility of a military intervention in Haiti, but the United States has found virtually no support within the OAS for deposing the Hartian military by

At a press briefing on Wednesday, Deputy Secretary of State Strobe Talbott said the administration had not ruled out force but was more hopeful it could be avoided on the basis of talks with its Latin American and Caribbean allies in recent days, Reuters reported.

Not only are we committed to exhausting all political, diplomatic and economic instruments available to us to achieve a peaceful multilateral solution to this problem," he said, "but as a result of what's happened in recent days, we have an even higher degree of confidence that that is indeed possible and it certainly is our hope."]

In New Mexico, Governor Bruce King defeated two challengers in the Democratic primary. Also in New Mexico, Senator Jeff Bingaman, a Democrat, ran unopposed. He will face Colin McMillan, a former undersecretary of defense in the Bush administration who overwhelmed two opponents to win the state's Republican nomination.

The races came on the most crowded primary day so far this year. In Montana, a former law school dean, Jack Mudd, won the Democratic Senate nomination to take on Senator Conrad Burns, who is considered one of the most vulnerable incumbents this year. After a contentious race, Mr. Mudd defeated former Senator John Melcher, who was seeking to reclaim the seat he lost to Mr. Burns in

A Fresh Start for Clinton?

The long D-Day weekend celebrating unity of purpose, commemorating individual acts of bravery and recalling the eventual triumph of good over evil lifted spirits on both sides of the Atlantic and allowed President Bill Clinton to float, at least momentarily, above the foreign policy frustrations that have plagued his first 17 months. If only today's foreign policy agenda lent itself to such clarity and back-to-the-wall heroism. But the challenges of 1994 are less cataclysmic - and far more ambiguous - than those of 1944, And when the president tried, in his speech to the French National Assembly on Tuesday, to summon some of that D-Day spirit to address present European challenges, the exercise looked strained.

The goals he articulated were worthy: expand democracy, integrate the economies of Eastern and Western Europe, develop a system of cooperative security with the former Warsaw Pact, try to contain and calm the Bosnian conflict. But where the weekend's commemorative speeches rang with purpose and personal engagement, Tuesday's policy address had all the passion of a political science text.

Yet Mr. Clinton still has a rare chance to refocus his administration's foreign policy, clarifying America's role in the world and improving day-to-day execution. The president's careful preparations for this trip and his immersion in recent European history have given him new confidence in foreign affairs and perhaps a new appreciation of its significance for his presidency. And his creditable performance has won respect at home and abroad. It is a valuable moment in his presidency, a chance for a fresh foreign policy start. He should make the most of it. One lesson the president seems to have learned recently is that a big power like the United States cannot easily abstain from maior global crises. Given America's global engagement during the half-century from Pearl Harbor to the collapse of the Soviet Union.

Bosnia becomes a form of intervention. Yet Mr. Clinton has always understood that Washington cannot continue to assume all the global responsibilities that came with the Cold War. Rightly, he wants his presidency to be known for its domestic accomplishments. Belatedly, he is coming to understand that a reputation for foreign policy fecklessness can undermine domestic credibility.

Mr. Clinton's biggest problem has been the unresolved conflict between a globalist rhe-torical agenda that seems to invite U.S. involvement everywhere and day-to-day decision-making that seems to permit it nowhere. Compounding this has been the president's reluctance to appear personally engaged in his own administration's foreign policy.

Mr. Clinton succeeded so well in Europe this week because he finally did step into the role of national leader and commander in chief. He needs to build on that success by speaking out more often and more effectively on foreign policy issues, abandoning academic abstractions for the kind of strong personal imagery he used in the cemeteries and battle sites of Europe. And he needs to close the gap between rhetoric and practice by making firm choices among competing priorities.

In an era of reduced danger, no abstract set of rules can determine when the United States should involve its forces in a foreign crisis. Washington should not try to manage the world. It should be clear about the differences between localized crises, however intense, and strategic challenges, like the future of Russia, China and Mexico. It should mainly look out for American interests, including the defense of allies and the promotion of American values. Presidents rarely get the chance to change course in foreign policy without a disastrous loss of credibility. Mr. Clinton has such

The Voices of Europe

The European Parliament has bad luck with the timing of its elections. The last one. in June 1989, took place just as communism was starting to collapse in Eastern Europe. and before West Europeans could grasp what that collapse meant for them. It meant, they can now see, the possibility of a wider, eastward-reaching European Union; the certainty of a stronger Germany; and therefore fresh complications in the building of Europe's institutions.

The new election - on Thursday in four countries, on Sunday in the other eight takes place just as the opinion polls show that a solid majority of the Union's people have now drawn their conclusions from the events of 1989. They want a wider Union. They do not yet want a federal Europe. And meanwhile they are alarmed by the fact that Europe's unemployment next year is predicted to be proportionately twice as big as America's, and four times as big as Japan's. Will the new Parliament's politicians reflect the people's concerns?

The answer is blurrier than it ought to be because these are in fact 12 almost separate elections, each driven chiefly by national events. The Socialist group in the new Parliament may be bigger than it was in the old one because Socialists are locally more popular now in Britain. Germany and two or three other countries than they were in 1989. The Christian Democrats will suffer from the near-obliteration by scandal of their Italian contingent. And so on. Despite that, here are three ways of judging what the next few days' voting will mean.

On the tighter-or-looser-Europe question, things are complicated by the fact that the Christian Democrats, the Socialists and the Liberal group in the Parliament are already committed to further integration. Between them, they are sure to dominate the new Parliament. That points to a clash between politicians and the man in the street, until minds change on one side or the other. So it is desirable that the respectable voice of anti-centralization - such as Manfred Brunner's party in Germany, John Major's sort of British Conservative, and their French equivalents - should win a place in the Parliament. Otherwise the antitightening argument will be left to the harsh cries of neonationalists.

On the wider-Europe issue, the vote that matters is less the parliamentary election than Sunday's simultaneous referendum in Austria on joining the Union. A lot of Austrians, worried about losing their identity in a centralized Europe, are suddenly wondering whether they should stay out.

If Austria votes "no," that will make Sweden and Norway — maybe even Finland - likelier to do the same in their referendums later in the year. And that could scotch the hope of bringing in the Poles, Czechs and Hungarians. In Paris on Tuesday, President Bill Clinton urged the Union to open its doors to the east. To that end, hope for a "yes" from Austria, but one small enough to show Austrian worries.

On the imemployment front, the important thing is that Europe should not make its labor market even more rigid than it is, and its welfare system even more hostile to the creation of jobs. The Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development reported this week that those are two of the main reasons why Europe's jobless problem is so much worse than America's or Japan's.

No major party in the European Parliament is guiltless on this score. But it may be better if the expected success of the Socialists, the chief defenders of Europe's present labor policies, does not bring them an absolute majority. Two years from now, the governments of the European Union assemble to inspect its future. The European Parliament, strengthened by the Maastricht treaty, will help to shape their judgment. Let the Parliament be sure that what it says is what the people of Europe want.

A Yellow Light Is Blinking

Unemployment in the United States has now fallen into the range that the Clinton administration expected to reach only in 1996. Over the past year the number of jobs has risen 3.7 million, as much as in the previous five years together. At last the recovery from the [990-9] recession has produced the longdelayed lift in employment. But the sharp drop in the unemployment rate this spring is also strong evidence that the Federal Reserve Board was right to be concerned about future inflation and right to slow the economy down. The figures for May show that the brakes are beginning to take effect. But they also show that there is not much slack left in the labor market. The survey of households reported an unemployment rate of 6 percent last month. down from 6.9 percent a year earlier. No one knows precisely at what point the demand for labor begins to make inflation accelerate upward, but most students of the subject estimate that it happens when unemployment falls be-tween 5.5 and 6 percent. The economy has entered a zone where caution is well justified.

Some economists argue that because of demographic changes - Tewer young people entering the labor force, a higher proportion of experienced workers — the danger point has sunk well below 5.5 percent unemployed. Recent experience argues otherwise. In 1989 the rate dropped to 5.3 percent. By mid-1990 inflation was rising rapidly, the Fed had raised interest rates in an effort to stop it, and the country was sliding into a painful recession.

A 6 percent unemployment rate means nearly 8 million people looking for jobs. The only safe way to get those numbers lower is through better education and job training. But it is hard not to look back nostalgically to a generation ago, when inflation remained stable with unemployment rates around 4 percent.

Woolly Thinking Won't Help Bosnia

WASHINGTON — America's politicians seem determined to underestimate the force of nationalism in the Balkans once again. They risk disaster in Bosnia by rushing past the obvious. At each turning point in the wars of Yugoslav succession, senior U.S. policymakers have assumed that reasonable outcomes could be enginecred by appealing to the self-interest and rationality of the combatants. With America's own politics long since secularized, they failed to grasp why the ex-Yugoslavs would start or continue the bloodletting and atroc-ities that have horrified the world.

The failure is a bipartisan one. The Bush administration frittered away the last chances to exert U.S. power to rein in Serbia's blood lust. The assumption in the State Department that Yugoslavia would not break up in bloody fashion prevailed.

The Clinton administration at least has sought to bring the wars it inherit-ed to a close. But Washington has now embarked on a diplomatic strategy that fails again to measure the forces it confronts. Its strategy risks involving America more deeply either in a far bloodier war or in trying to enforce an illusory and perhaps unjust peace. The Croatia-Bosnia alliance, exssed in the form of a confederation brokered by the Clinton admin-istration three months ago, is seen by Croatians and the Bosnian Muslimdominated government as a vehicle for more war to recover territory seized by the Serbs, not as a diplomatic vehicle for a peace settlement.

Among Republicans in Congress

there is an effort to seize the moral high ground by trying to mandate a By Jim Hoagland unilateral breaking of the arms embar-go against Bosnia. But Senator Bob Dole and others underestimate the consequences of that step and the heavy responsibility it will impose on America for the fate of the Bosnian government and of Croatia.

Washington's response is a classic American misunderstanding of the force of nationalism and the willing-uess of small countries to pursue their own goals, at whatever cost, when those goals conflict with the good intentions and rational assumptions of outside powers wanting to help.

A sign of the understanding gap came in late May. The Croatian government of President Franjo Tudjman announced that it would issue banknotes called the kuna to replace the Yugoslav dinar. The kuna has been used by Croatia once before: under the fascist Ustashe government that condoned massacres of Croatian Serbs and Jews in World War II.

This a foolish, flagrant provocation to the Serbs. It is not the act of a government ready to come to terms with its enemies

It is hard to imagine Croatia accepting an end to the war that leaves the Serbs with the 25 percent of Croatia they have seized. If American dinlomacy and the confederation can get those lands back, Mr. Tudiman will go along If not, Creatin will resume war and expect American military help in return for having cooperated on the confederation.

Unilaterally lifting the embargo against Bosnia will have little mean ing unless the United States is ready to provide arms to the Bosnians and through them to Croatia. That is a recipe for a significant expansion of bloodletting and "ethnic cleansing" throughout the Baltans.

To his credit, Secretary of State Warren Christopher recently warned against a unilateral lifting of the arms embargo, which he said "would thrust us into the middle of the situation." It is possible to construct an American strategy around a policy of open military support for Bosnian and Croatian war aims. But I do not hear Warren Christopher, Bob Dole or others arguing for such an expansion of the war and of American responsibility. What I hear instead from the leading politicians in both U.S. political parties is the enunciation of woolly hopes that a little well-intentioned American involvement will avoid having to make truly hard choices about war and peace. That approach did not work in Vietnam.

and it will not work in Bosnia. There are no good options in Bosnia now. But the first step has to be a reassessment by Americans of the nationalist forces at play in the Balkans, and an acceptance of the need to make hard choices now. The Washington Post.

Korea: Prepare Now To Step to the Brink By Gerald Segal

S EOUL —As the West, supported policy of forswearing nuclear weap-ons if North Korea is permitted to toward imposing economic sanctions on North Korea, there is deep confusion about what they would be intended to achieve. Some see sanctions as a punishment for the North's violations of its obligations as a signatory of the treaty to stop the spread of nuclear weapons. But an economic embargo will have little immediate impact, and with lave in the instruction may be already been done by Pyongyang.

There is now no way that the international Atomic Energy Agency can be sure that the regime of Kim Il Sung. has not diverted noticial for making nuclear weapons. Even if North Korea behaves well in future, there will always be reason to worry that it has a secret nuclear arsenal.

And the failure of the international community to prevent the North from breaching its obligations will be fatal to efforts to preserve the Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty, even in its present partially effective form.

If the strategy of price assessment

If the strategy of using sanctions as punishment is bankrupt, then only tougher steps stand any hope of suc-cess. Having failed to deter. North Korea from flouting the treaty, concerned countries must now compel it to cooperate. There should be no further hesitation. The slower the United States and like minded nations move to a tougher strategy, the more time North Korea has to convert its nuclear know-how into weapons, including warheads for the increasingly longrange ballistic missiles that Pyongyang is developing. There was virtue in going slow when the focus was on finding a peaceful solution. That strategy has failed. And failure to pursue a course of compulsion will make future efforts at deterrence by the international community far more difficult. Rogue states will know that defiance pays.

The immediate objection to using sanctions to force North Korea to dismantle its nuclear program is that it entails a serious risk of armed conflict, if not full-scale war.

But a policy that avoids such risks is hollow. The stakes in Korea are higher than were the stakes following the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait. The credibility of the Clinton administration's foreign policy is on the line. The stakes are also high for North-east Asia. For now, China remains reluctant to back any form of sanctions against Pyongyang.

emerge as a nuclear-armed power.

In the event of a power struggle in North Korea following the dermise of the spine Vin I Bank the spi the aging Kim Il Sung there is a real risk of a domestic crisis being played out with one or several factions hav-

The West and its Northeast Asian allies must be more open about the risks of armed conflict. Western democracies should not contemplate the possibility of war without adequately preparing public opinion.

There has been a tendency to blame

South Korea and Japan for a weak response to North Korea. But the main confusion in Western policy tomani confusion in Western policy today is coming from President Bill Pyongyang despite its belligerant rhetoric, is unlikely to respond to. sanctions with a full-scale invasion. It is more likely to lannch terrorist mis-sions and possibly rockets at the South Mr. Kim, like Saddam Hussein, will calculate that "soft" democracies have no stomach for a fight. He must be proved wrong.

Western sanctions, including a blockade of North Korea, may not bring the Kim regime to its knees. Neither is the notion of a military strike against the North's nuclear failities likely to be very effective. However, tough economic sanctions and a military blockade would aggra-vate the weaknesses and factionalism nherent in the North Korean system. An internal struggle for power would then be more likely to occur, Only with the fall of the Kim regime

Days of Common Purpose And of Courage Under Fire

By William Pfaff

TO ARIS — I wish Ryan, author of "The Longest Day" and a friend of mine, had lived to see Monday's ceremonies on the Normandy beaches. The title of his 1959 account of the landings has become universal shorthand for the day that decided the outcome of the war in Europe.

The enormous television and press coverage of Monday's ceremonies for once enhanced an event rather than bloating it. The coverage had the un-expected result of recalling to an older generation, and revealing to an order generation, and revealing to a younger one, what prodigies people are capable of when they work for a common purpose, deeply felt.

A son of a friend of mine said to his father, "But if we could put 200,000 men ashore in one day, against that resistance, why can't we do something about Bosnia?" There were 11,000 Allied casualties in that one day, on those four beaches. Why are people now so fearful of risks, of casualties — and of responsibility for shaping events?

The carnage of the Normandy beaches and of what followed, and the equivalent horrors of the Pacific campaigns, did not leave the Allied powers spent, or deprive them of their capacity to meet costly responsibilities. They willingly went to war in Korea five years after the world war ended.

For Americans, Vietnam was, of course, the great turning point. From the start the public lacked commitment to the political cause in Vietnam. That is why the governments of the period escalated in secret and lied to the public about the extent of the war and the progress being made. This in turn rebounded when the public withdrew its trust from its leaders.

But while Vietnam can explain a faltering of the American govern-ment's will, it does not explain a retreat from responsibility that today takes individual as well as public forms. Individuals plead that they are not accountable for their ives because their upbringing was flawed, their par-ents inadequate or abusive, or because their color or sex invites discrimination.

The public form this takes is a diffusion of responsibility through so many bureaucratic lavers that it disappears, It is actually a denial of responsibility for a president or other high official to say "I am responsible" when an American helicopter is brought down by friendly fire or a U.S. warship shoots down a civilian airliner. Attorney General Janet Reno said she was responsible for the catastrophe that ended the siege of cultists in Waco. Texas, last year. Did she not make her decision on the recommendation of experienced law officers? Are captains of U.S. ships, or commanders of infantry formations, no longer accountable?

The example of the Normandy beaches is of responsibility individually as well as collectively assumed, in the face of horror. Omaha was the worst of the beaches, the water red with blood, the landings obstructed by the floating American dead. The troops following ran over them, which was the worst of the horror. Their commanders said "Go! Go! Get be-although it was a near thing. Their predecessors at Anzio, in January, had not gotten off the beach. They had a cautious commander. They were pinned there and did not break out until four months later. But their commander was relieved and replaced.

The response to irresponsibility is recognition that you do not live forever. Americans today do not like that idea. But understanding it is crucial to how you conduct the life you have. One of the Ranger veterans at the Pointe du Hoc said Monday that when he first saw those cliffs, he thought he could only die there, so he would have to give a good account of himself.
Cornelius Ryan told of a comman

do officer off Juno, the Canadians' beach, who, when the landing craft came under fire and everyone else took cover, walked up and down on the foredeck with his stick under his arm. "I thought it was the thing to do," he said afterward. What today has been lost is a grasp of the fact that we can do nothing about dying — or living — except to do it well.

Nothing Like It Will Happen Again:

By Herman Wouk

WASHINGTON — It belongs not with the great military memories of American history like Gettysburg and Valley Forge, but with Agincourt and Salamis. The age that produced this astounding work of warmaking has passed. It was a brief time, an intersection of politics on the grand scale with fastdeveloping marvels of science and technology, which gave monstrons regimes the wherewithal to challenge the world system, and almost to brinck it.

Seven years before Hitler invaded Poland, Sir James Chadwick discovered the neutron. Only 12 years earlier, Charles Lindbergh flew the Atlantic. The petroleum engine was less than a century old when panzers went knifing through Poland and Russia.

Four and a half years after the start of Hitler's assault on civilization, when the first global war was flaring through 360 degrees of longitude and from the Arctic to the Antarctic, the United States with its allies Britain; Canada and others issunched the gigantic seaborne assault on Europe that we remember as D-Day. We tend to forget what a near thing it was. If Field Marshal Romme had not received misleading weather reports on June 5, and Hitter had not retained command of the panzer divisions at Berchtesgaden, the outcome might well have been what General Eisenhower prepared for, by writing his foreboding communique about the failure of the landing the withdrawal of the troops, and his acceptance of full responsibility for the catastrophe, Nothing like D-Day will happen again not because human nature has improved, but because weaponry has. Making war on that grand scale is obsolete. That does not mean in the least that war is finished. The day's headlines tell us otherwise. We seem to be at the death of one age and the birth of another. Our little globe has as yet barely been explored; the poles were first reached about the time I was born; and ancient disputes and hatted of centuries are a global hentage.

We Americans are in a mood of self-doubt; not to say self-detestation, these days. That national mood comes and goes, as the fulfillment of the sample dreams for which the United States was created countines to clude us, for all our stunning progress and our undis-puted leadership in world affairs. It is good to remember that we were capable of an effort like Overlord, It is good to remember, too, that the D-Day invasion was only one jaw of the autoracker forged by Franklin Roosevelt at Tehran; the other jaw, a colossal counterattack by the Russians in the east on June 22. It was the closing of those jaws that crushed once and for all the criminal regime menacing the earth.

"Nations are cold monsters," said Charles de Gaulle. It is the distinction, and to some sober thinkers the weakness, of the United States that its foreign policy is never quite frigid and monstrous enough, not based wholly on self-interest; tinged with genuine morality that makes a cry of hypocrisy all too easy.

But it is well for the world that, such as it is, America exists and is the strongest power in the world. Long may this be so, while the new age struggles to be born. Because with all its deep, deep flaws, the United States remains the last best hope for the world where war at last fades away, a forgotten primitive human practice like ducting and human sacrifice; and where the tale of D-Day will truly be one with Agincourt and Salamis.

A Small Price to Pay for Proving Malthus Wrong

WASHINGTON — So far, food VV supplies have not, as Malthus predicted 200 years ago, been overtak-en by human numbers. Science has provided the means to more than keep pace. Nutrition in the developing world has improved, life expectancy has grown, and infant mortality has been cut in half. Yet there is no reason to be confident that Malthus was wrong in more than his timing, Already, 700 million people are malnourished, and an ap-palling 40,000 die every day of hunger and hunger-related diseases. There is unmistakable evidence of overstress in land and water. And, despite falling birthrates, the world is about to expe rience growth on an unprecedented scale: 3 billion more people in 30 years—one India each decade.

The transitory success of the "Green Revolution" misled governments, many experts now say, into dangerous complacency about future food supplies. These experts warn that, absent an urgent effort, the trend of a steadily improving human condition could turn sharply downward in the coming decades.

Although global agriculture far outstripped population growth (now at 1.7 percent per year) in the '60s and 70s, production per person suddenly stopped growing in the mid-80s. Statistically, it is too soon to tell whether the curve is flat or heading downward. But growth rates in the yields of major creps have fallen sharply in key regious. In China, for example, which is by far the largest rice producer, prodisction per hectare grew by 4 percent annually in the 1970s. In the 1980s, the figure was 1.6 percent.

Happily, such a system exists — a network of 18 research centers estabiished in 1972 that go by the memora-ble acronym of CGIAR. Their early projects, new varieties of rice and wheat, have provided food for more than I billion people. Unhappily, the system is now in crisis. The centers' have lost a third of their researchers since 1989, and 20 percent of their funding in the last two years alone. Their ability to recruit top talent is in ecopardy. And all this because of a shortfall of $50 million a year, sixthousandths of one percent of world military spending.

The case for an amply and securely funded program is overwhelming. Few investments produce comparable economic rates of return. In human terms, everything begins with adequate nutrition; health, the ca-pacity to learn, the capacity to work and declining fertility rates (which do

The verdict on Mathus will have to stay out for some years yet. Most likely, the outcome will depend not so much on whether mankind has the whether it can moster the foresight and the requisite political will. Early indicators to watch will be the results of this fall's Population Summit in Cairo and the fate of a rescue plan for the CGIAR.

1894: Intolerant French

PARIS - M. Jules Lemaitre, one of the most distinguished men of letters in France, in addressing an assembly of students yesterday [June 8] made some remarks on toleration. He said that it has but a small place in French daily life. Where, indeed, is intolerance not to be found? In literature the young are intolerant of the old; in politics one party is intolerant of an-other; in philosophy and in theology intolerance everywhere prevails. In short, according to M. Lemaitre, every Frenchman resembles that "delightful Voltaire, who said so many fine things about toleration, yet wanted to send everyone who dif-

Investigators Sometimes Need Help Getting Started

By William Safire

T INTON, North Dakota - "Invidious was the deliciously defama-tory word chosen by Lloyd Cutler, White House counsel, to denounce my use of "bribery" to characterize the undeclared gift of $100,000 in so-called profit to the Clintons. I'm used to that. Here are three recent examples of investigations stemming from enlightened indiousness, in this space and clsewhere, and where they went.

Three years ago, a cloud no bigger than a man's hand appeared on the political horizon: The bank operated by the House of Representatives was exposed as a check-kiting center, providing interestfree loans to perkomaniacal members. Though high-class media played down.

Muckrakers mark success not merely in convictions obtained but in wrongdoing made costly and future predations averted.

the story because no public funds were involved, late night talk-show hosts sensed a rip-off that would resonate with real people. The voter fury they fanned forced the previously complacent speaker to close down the corrupted facility.

But the little cloud was seeded with suspicion. A source told me that the House sergeant-at-arms, a casher of mysterious checks, was the protege of a powerful committee chairman.

Absent hard evidence, unable to force suspects to talk, what's a poor muckraker to do? I trusted my source and my sniffer enough to speculate in "Why hasn't the sergeant-atarms been fired? ... Because he is under the protection of Representative Dan Rostenkowski of Illinois."

I like to think that this and a subsequent jab at "Rosty's protégé" helped awaken official investigators. Last October, Jack Russ, whose mentor could no longer protect him, pleaded guilty to embezzling $75,000 and concealing from Congress $221,000 in check-cashing chicanery. He is now in jail. Did he implicate his patron in copping a plea, or did he take the rap? We will find out at Mr. Rostenkowski's trial.

The point is that muckraking which ranges from speculative suspicion about public figures to detailed exposes by teams of investigative reporters - often contributes to the continuous cleansing of Augean stables.

It is usually denounced as invidious ("detrimental to reputation") by both the fair-minded and the culpable. Bert Lance used to say. "There's more muck-rakers around these days than muck-makers." And many times, investigations stimulated by muckrakers fail to reach the level of prosecution.

But even those can serve a purpose. Another example: When press reports appeared in the 1992 campaign that the passport files of Bill Clinton and his mother were searched by State Department political appointees looking for dirt, the furor caused the appointment of independent counsel.

In a couple of months, Joseph di-Genova's grand jury is likely to con-clude that the search of the files was not unlawful, but the perpetrator of the crime of disclosing their contents could not be found. No indictments will be handed up, but a public report will be issued about this abuse of power sure to taint the record of former Secretary of State James Baker and his closest aides. As a result, no future secretary is likely to run the risk of letting henchwomen do political dirty work soon again; the cost of the investigation was public money well spent.

Curiously, raking this Passport Office muck turned up yet another inva-sion of privacy: It became known that evidence was tainted by the illicit eavesdropping on calls made through the State Department's communications center. In this space and elsewhere, demands were promptly made to find and punish the snoops who — with no warrant — secretly listened in on calls made by private citizens. The Justice Department has quietly closed that investigation into these "overhears" on the dubious grounds that the wrongdoing had become so routine for so long that it amounted to a government policy.

However, even this Reno nonfeasance could have its positive effect: Individ-uals eavesdropped upon in the past who file civil suits may be able to force Justice to disgorge evidence about the specific invasion of their privacy. And today, officials at State's Communications Center politely ask callers beforehand if they want the call "moni-tored." We invidiots mark success in scandal-mongering not merely in convic-tions obtained but in wrongdoing made costly and future predations averted.

Bunyan's "man with the muckrake." gaze fixed downward, missed seeing the celestial crown in the sky. Such is the chance progressive pilgrims take in airing suspicions and probing probers to probe, but sometimes there's gold in that thar muck.

Central Europe's Future Regarding "Sifting Through the Pasts

in Search of an Identity" (Opinion, May 25) by William Pfaff:

Mr. Pfaff writes that the Czech prime minister, Vaclav Klaus, fears that European Union may introduce a milder form of the "aggressive socialism" his citizens knew before 1989. Certainly Mr. Klaus. an admirer of Margaret Thatcher, will defend Czech sovereignty in negotiations with the European Union, to ward that off. But it is odd that Mr. Pfaff should then write that Central European "Euroskeptics" like Mr. Klaus "see the future of their countries in terms of the past."

Myth-Making About Jobs

The writer, Reginald Dale, asks a twopart question. "Where have all the good jobs gone, and how can we get them back?" And Now for a News Flash: Something Good Happened

By Richard Harwood

WASHINGTON - The mail brings a copy of William Bennett's latest "Index of Leading Cultural Indicators." It is bad news.

Violent crimes in America are up more than 500 percent since 1960. Criminals pay a petry price for their misdeeds. The average "expected punishment" for murder is 18 years of hard time, 60 days for rape, 6.4 days for aggravated assault. The number of children living off welfare checks has risen since 1960 from 1 in 30 to 1 in 8. Abortions, illegitumate births, divorces, child abuse and time spent with TV are on the rise. At the same time, social expenditures in constant dollars have risen in 30 years from $144 billion to $787 billion. America isn't going to hell; it has been there since lke died.

Why am I reading this stuff? It's old news. Similar evidence of social collapse, deprayed behavior and impending doom has been served up steaming hot every day for years by newspapers, magazines, televi-sion and the Hollywood media. It is creating a nation of psychotic pessimists who see disaster around every corner.

The Orwellian state is at hand. You can't smoke or tell an ethnic joke without being bashed by the Clean Air-Clean Tongue sect. Time magazine spec-ulates on the possibility of a collision between Earth and a huge comet: Newsweek reports that margarine is loaded with "trans fatty acids" that can kill you. People are finishing one another off by the thousands in Rwanda, Liberia, Sudan, East Timor, Hairi, Bosnia, the streets of urban America and other lands yet to make the nightly news.

Newsweek's sagacious Robert Samuel-son tried earlier in the year to leaven this sad diet with a good news column: American industry is robust. Americans are healthier and wealthier than the last generation, the divorce rate is falling (slightly) and "for all the talk of family breakdown, roughly seven of 10 children under 18 live with both parents. He is not alone. Many scholars, free of deadlines and the competitive pressures of the journalistic culture, are bringing to the "news" perspectives that calm our feverish minds. Society, a journal of sociology published by Rutgers University, addresses a hot subject this month: "Marital Infidelity," a study conducted by Andrew Greeley, Others from Alfred Kinsey to Shere Hite have claimed that one in four wives and seven in 10 husbands are adulterous, proof that Sodom and Gomorrah is alive and well in America.

Mr. Greeley — a priest, novelist, University of Chicago professor and member of the National Opinion Research Center - says this is poppycock: "All these statistics have one characteristic in common. They are not based on national probability samples" and thus have the same relationship to "responsible social science as . . . magic [has] to medicine."

The center has done the proper sampling he says, coming up with an adul-tery rate (over a lifetime) of only 11 percent for wives and 21 percent for husbands. Similar studies abroad produced extremely high percentages of sexual monogamy among married people: 86 per-cent in the United States, 80 percent in Denmark, 89 percent in Britain and clutch your hat - 92 percent in France.

Well, on to the next good news installment, which involves American blacks, of whom the Washington Post columnist William Raspberry once said: "If you were a Martian and read nothing but The Washington Post, you would think this city is inhabited by five kinds of people — Georgetown and Northwest whites, black militants . . black criminals, black welfare mothers."

We get essentially the same picture every day from the press, although we can see all around us a very large, confident, well-educated, economically and politi-cally successful black middle class. The current issue of the Journal of Blacks in Higher Education addresses the point in an entire page of good news suppets from which I draw a few examples. While the enrollment of white college students declined in 1992, black enrollments increased by 4.4 percent to 1,393,483. The percentage of black students in medical schools has more than tripled since 1968; the number of blacks enrolled in MBA courses has grown by 60 percent over the past decade; the number of black law school students has increased since 1970 by 60 percent; the number of practicing ack lawyers has quadrupled.

There is good news about the environment. Air and water are cleaner than when I was young. Contemporary hysteria over such "environmental hazards" as asbestos in classrooms is misplaced. John D. Graham, founding director of Harvard's Center for Risk Analysis, tells us to lighten up. A baby's chances of being hit on the ground by a falling aircraft, he reports, are about a thousand times greatthan death from classroom asbestos. The risk from many of the "toxic substances" identified by the Environmental Protection Agency are "no greater than what people routinely incur from drinking a cup of coffee each day or eating eanut butter sandwich for lunch."

There's plenty to cheer about out there. We just don't print much of it. It's neither culturally nor commercially correct in the news business.

State terror in Turkish Kurdi

At the same time as we are celebrating the 50th anniversary of the Normandy landings and honouring the victims of past barbarities, close at hand, in an allied country armed and financed by our democratic regimes, in an atmosphere of general indifference, a people long ill-treated by history is suffering systematic destruction of its villages, the forced depopulation if its towns and the decimation of its intellegensia

Every month about thirty Kurdish villages are wiped off the map, forests are burned, several Oradours' are perpetrated under cover of the fight against terrorism. Public opinion and the international community remain silent.

In the face of an intense disinformation campaign from Ankara, which tends to reduce the problems and aspirations of the 15 million Kurds in Turkey to .PKK terrorism», the undersigned non-governmental organisations, which support the Kurdish civilian population but oppose all forms of violence, wish to bring the following facts to the attention of the public :

The Kurdish towns of Sirnak, Kulp, Lice and Çukurca, have been physically destroyed to a great extent and become ghost towns. Half the population of others, like Cizre, Silvan, Idil, Midyat and Nuszybin have fled as a result of a policy of terror and assassination carried out by Turkish security forces. In the last two years they have assassinated 1638 Kurdish intellectuals, political personalities, Trade Unionists and leachers, including the Kurdish poet Musa Anter, 74 years of age, Member of Parliament Mardin Mehmet Sincar and 72 other cadres of his Democracy Party and 34 journalists and newsagents.

Many thousands of Kurdish political activists are in prison, solely because of their opinions, Amongst these are M.Ps Leyla Zana, Mahmut Ahnak, Hatip Dicke, Orhan Dogan, Sirri Sakik and Ahmet Turk, who have been in preventive detention since March 4th and risk death sentences for their opinions; Mehdi Zana, former Mayor of Diyarhakir, who had already spent 15 years in prison and is now serving a 4 years sentence for his testimony before the European Parliament; Turkish sociologist, Ismail Besikçi, who has already spent 12 years in jail for his writings on the Eurdish question and is back in prison for another 5 years; 64 journalists and many university lecturers and lawyers.

Since January 1,1994, 5899 people have been taken into custody and tortured; 164 have died or «disappeared» while held incommunicado (officially 15 days, renewable). As a result of this systematic policy of State Terrorism since 1980 half the population of the Kurdish provinces has been driven out. It is clearly the Turkish authorities' aim to depopulate Kardistan, destroy the territorial basis of the Kurdish question and scatter the Kurdish people so as to insure assimilation. This is in the spirit of the traditional Turkish policy of «ethnic recomposition of the country». This began with the genocide of the Armenians was followed by the expulsion of 1,200,000 Greeks from Anatolia in the 1920s and now is to be completed by the scattering of the Kurds, the last indigenous non-Turkish community in the country.

All these facts are well known to our governments who also know that the war in Kurdistan has already caused more than 15,000 deaths and cost the Turkish Government over $ 25 billion.

We are thus all the more indignant at their refusal to punish Turkey, which they continue to accept in our Western institutions, such as the Council of Europe and NATO, thus giving it a completely undeserved certificate of good conduct. The undersigned organisations consider that, in the present situation, any state selling arms to Turkey or providing it with economic aid, which is being directed for this war, is an accomplice of Furkey's campaign of destruction and depopulation in Turkish Kurdistan, They urge Western Democracies to act decisively to persuade their Turkish ally to stop persecuting the Kurdish people and to initiate a political solution for the Kurdish question under the aegis of the CSCE, the European Union or UN II Ankara persists in its present policy, they should withdraw all political, economic, financial or military support and exclude Turkey from Western institutions where its presence can only discredit and disbonour the West. Scientist Wins Case In a Russian Court And Against State

By Fred Hiatt Washington Post Service

MOSCOW - A Moscow district court ordered the government on Wednesday to pay 30 million rubles to a scientist unjustly prosecuted for discussing and criticizing Russia's chemical weapons pro-

The scientist, Vil Mirzayanov, and his lawyer said their victory represented the first time in modern Russian history that a court of law had awarded damages to a citizen in compensation for the arbitrary actions of the state.

Mr. Mirzayanov, 59, who less than five months ago was in a jail cell so crowded he could not lie down, said he was delighted and surprised at the decision, which came after only one day of trial. "I feel happy that at long last a

Russian citizen can have his fate decided as a respected citizen in court, and not at the mercy of some But Mr. Mirzayanov cautioned

In winning their fourth straight national campaign the Tories took 43 percent of the vote, compared with 39 percent for Labor.

In addition to the European ballot, the Tories also face the prospect of losing a special election to fill the seat held by Stephen Milligan, a Conservative member of Parliament from Hampshire whose death last year provoked salacious stories in London tabloids. Mr. Milligan accidentally died of suffocation while engaged in what the police described as "an auto-crotic that one judge's ruling is only a "small sign" of progress. He said the agencies held liable were certain to appeal. In addition, he noted, he has been refused permission to travel abroad.

The Moscow court ordered state prosecutors to pay Mr. Mirzayanov 20 million rubles (about $10,300 at current exchange rates). His former employer, the Institute of Organic Chemistry, was ordered to pay him 10 million rubles. But the judge. Nikolai Vorabyov, rejected Mr. Mirzayanov's request for compensation from the former KGB, saying the recently reorganized security agency could not be held responsible for the actions of its predecessor agency.

Mr. Mirzayanov was arrested in the fall of 1992, after the breakup of the Soviet Union, and charged with revealing state secrets after he suggested in newspaper articles that Russia was continuing to develop chemical weapons in contradiction of its public assurances. He went on trial last January.

Rights groups, American members of Congress and others protested the charges and the secreey of the trial, calling both a throwback to Soviet practices. After a day. Mr. Mirzavanov refused to testify and was jailed.

President Boris N. Yeltsin's national security adviser. Yuri Batarin, then said he believed the prosecution's case was without merit. On March 11, charges were dropped. One month later, Mr. Yelisin dismissed Anatoli Kuntsevich, the retired general who was said to have led the campaign to rosecute Mr. Mirzayanov, from his post as chairman of the Comand Biological Disarmament.

Reflecting on the astonishingly fast turnaround in his position. Mr. Mirzayanov said that the outcome on Wednesday was beyond his wildest dreams of five months ago. His lawyer, Alexander Asnis, said the ruling was an important step in the democratizing of Russia's courts.

Mr. Mirzayanov said that "of course" he would continue to fight against chemical weapons research. which he believes is continuing here. He said he was working with scientists in the United States, Germany and elsewhere to broaden the convention banning chemical weapons and promote its signing.

But he said his work was harnpered when bureaucrats denied him a passport to travel abroad. saying he could not go because he knows state secrets.

Clinton Gives the Go-Ahead For a UN Force in Rwanda

By Paul Lewis

UNITED NATIONS, New York - With the United Nations now close to recruiting the troops it needs for an expanded Rwandan peacekeeping operation, the Clinton administration has given its consent to the force's deployment.

A new draft Security Council resolution prepared by the United States and circulated to members calls for the new, mainly African, force to start moving into Rwanda with the task of protecting displaced people inside the country as well as the relief workers aiding

But the resolution says the new force shall not act as a buffer between the forces of the rebel Rwanda Patriotic Front and those of Rwandan government.

nor will it try to make them stop fighting. Senior UN officials said they now had been promised most of the 5,500 troops they need for the Rwanda military operation. The only units still to be found are such technical ones as engineers, vehicle maintenance staff, logistical experts and the staff for a field Iqbal Riza, the UN official in charge of peacekeeping, expressed frustration at the delays in assembling the needed forces at a time when thousands of people are being killed. "No government would operate the way we have to operate," he said at a news conference. Human-rights groups, like Africa Watch, have blamed the Clinton administration for some of the delays, saying it is overly cautious in its approach.

American officials, however, argue that the United Nations must be realistic and avoid taking on tasks it cannot fulfill. Earlier this year, the Clinton administration drew up guidelines governing American support for future peacekeeping operations, insisting that the United Nations should have clear-cut goals and the means to In the new American resolution, the United States drops its previous insistence that the expanded peacekeeping force should deploy mainly along the Rwandan border areas. Instead, the new force will try to fly into the Rwandan capital, Kigali, to reinforce the small UN force already protecting thousands of displaced people there before moving into the center of the country; where the largest concentrations of endangered civilians are thought to be.

Troops for UN: Source Of Conflict for Swiss

The Swiss are sharply divided over a referendum next Sunday on a government proposal to provide peacekeeping troops to the United Nations. Opinion surveys point to a close vote.

The government, under international pressure to do so, plans to provide about 600 peacekeepers. The estimated cost: 100 million Swiss francs ($70 million) a year.

But opponents cite the counury's tradition of neutrality and warn darkly that the money could be diverted from more urgent needs, like old-age pensions. Billboards have sprung up showing the grave marker of a Swiss soldier in the middle of a bleak, and obviously distant, desert landscape.

The government, and three of the four main political parties, have tried to convince voters that Swiss independence will not suffer.

But the Swiss have ignored government advice before. They voted overwhelmingly against UN membership in 1986 and narrowly against participation in the European Economic Area in 1992. In February, they infuriated their neighbors by voting to ban heavy trucks from Alpine

William Drozdiak of The Washington Post reported from Istanbul: Senior U.S. officials said the United States, France, Britain and Russia were hoping to complete work on a proposed settlement by the end of the month that could be presented to Bosnia's belligerents as the fairest and most feasible solution to the war. The four-nation contact group hopes to take advantage of the onemonth cease-fire to resolve their own differences over the shape of the map that would split Bosnia-

Herzegovina along ethnic lines. A senior U.S. official said the contact group must settle a number nes can be connected among the three separate ethnic entities.

Bosnia's Muslims, for example, occupy enclaves in Gorazde. Zepa, and Srebrenica that are surrounded by Serbs and must be assured that they will not be cut off.

"in structuring the proposal," the official said, "we will make sure that natural boundaries are respected and people are not isolat-

The contact group nations would then present their proposed peace plan to the three warring parties and exert pressure to get them to accept it. This approach is being touted by France and Britain as the last chance to reach a peaceful settlement or else they will take steps to remove their 10,000 peacekeepof "qualitative concerns" that in-

Some Algerian journalists have challenged the system - and paid the price. More than 30 have been jailed. Newspapers have been forced to cease publication, either because of long-overdue printing bills, lines or refusal to provide security guards.

By last year the Association of Algerian Journalists had complained that the government want-ed to muzzle independent investigations and commentary on the security situation, return to a single press, reinstate censorship, and transform the press into a propaganda tool for the state's use,

But even its brief heyday, Algerian press freedom was more appar-ent than real, reflecting habits of subservience accumulated since Algeria won independence from France in 1962. Until 1989 the National Liberation Front controlled the press as it controlled political life - with all the defects of a single party state.

Then so-called reformers, out to end the Liberation Front's stifling rule and open Algeria's command economy to market forces, helped journalisis start newspapers. Quasi-state enterprises provided subsidized newsprint, printing presses and office space and handled circu-

After Islamic extremists began killing foreigners last fall, major Western news organizations gradually withdrew their Algiers-based correspondents. A notable exception is the France's Agence France-Presse. Foreign correspondents now make occasional reporting trips when the government ap-proves hard-to-obtain visas.

Although Algeria's journalists have been portrayed abroad as victims of Islamic radicals, increasingly they have also been called to account by their foreign colleagues, especially in Europe.

Algeria never had a free and independent press, said Robert Men-ard, director of Reporters Without Borders, a Paris-based organization desending press freedom worldwide. Rather, Algeria has a private press linked to various clans in military security.

Human Rights Watch/Middle East, based in New York and Washington, noted in a January report that the Algerian media, especially state-run radio and television, provide little sense of the brutality of the state's campaign against the Islamists and their suspected sympthizers.

Its other hotel partner, Command Video Corp., partly owned by Comsat Video Enterprises. a subsidiary of Comsat Corp., recently agreed to incorporate the 10 Nintendo games into 300,000 hotel rooms nationwide, making the system accessible to an estimated 20

Our client belongs to the world's top pharmaceutical groups, is based in France and was founded in 1973. The enterprise constitutes a coherent set of activities committed to serving the cause of life in several business segments, the main one being Human Healthcare. As of the present time, all products marketed are sold worldwide under one brand name. The worldwide turnover of the pharma division amounts to USD 2.3 billion.

2 Country Managers/Pharma division

based in Poland/Russia

Immediate requirement has arisen for two Country Managers, based in Moscow and Warsaw, respectively. The main tasks will be to build up, expand and manage the local pharma organization, to market, promote and sell the whole pharmaceutical product line. Apart from the obvious requisite of extensive managerial experience, the quality most needed in a candidate as a national expatriate is knowledge of the language and business mentality of the country where he is to serve. In addition, the candidates must understand and accept the rules of the local market economy (which require most of all the willingness to work both well and much). Candidates should have a rather situative management style in order to be able to set the necessary actions locally. Reporting to the Head of Pharmaceutical Operations for Central & Eastern Europe, candidates should be between 35 and 45, hold a university degree combined with pharmaceutical background, be well experienced in local business practice and have good Polish/Russian language skills as well as extensive knowledge in English or French. Good strategic thinkers with bright, dynamic, ambilious, target oriented and result driven personalities combined with excellent argumentation and communication skills and readiness to travel extensively will receive an attractive remuneration package including a highly competitive base salary, performance-related bonus and executive car. Deadly Strain Of Strep Needs Early Diagnosis

By Gina Kolata New York Times Service

EW YORK - A highly virulent strain of streptococcal bacteria, often referred to in popular accounts as "deadly. flesh-eating bacteria," is making a comeback in the United States and elsewhere.

Although the number of people affected is relatively small, scientists say they are concerned because the hacteria are so dangerous and yet the symptoms they produce are often disregarded in the early stages of disease, when treatment is

The bacteria, called group A strep, are reported to have caused a dozen deaths in England this year. The microorganisms in their severe, invasive form can cause a fatal drop in blood pressure, toxic shock and organ failure and, in about 25 to 50 percent of cases, in a form known as necrotizing fasciitis can eat away at flesh. Another form, called myositis, eats at muscle.

Microbiologists and epidemiologists emphasize that the disease is rare. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in Atlanta estimates that severe, invasive Group A strep struck just 10,000 to 15.000 Americans last year. But, medical researchers said, five years ago it was almost nonexistent.

Last week, Norwalk Hospital in Connecticut reported that two unrelated patients, a man reported to be 31 and a woman, 22, were hospitalized with the disease. They had come to the emergency room separately during the week of May 22. The man's infection was destroying flesh and the woman's was destroying muscle. The man is repoted in critical condition and the woman is in satisfactory condition.

One expert, Dr. Patrick M. Schlievert, a professor of microbi-ology at the University of Minnesota, estimates that there are at least twice as many cases of group A strep infection this year as there were a year ago.

Rare though it may be, group A strep infection is not to be taken lightly. As many as 30 to 50 percent of those infected with the severe. invasive group A strep die, researchers say, and others who survive often require amoutations or the removal of large areas of flesh to stop the bacteria's relentless spread.

HE infection does not reemble an ordinary strepinfection, which usually results merely in a sore throat. The group A bacteria tend to infect cuts or bruises or to follow a throat infection.

"If you have some sort of trauma. like a bruise, and you develop a fever, you should be concerned that you have an infection," said Dr. Dennis L. Stevens, a professor of medicine at the University of Washington in Seattle, warning that increasing pain is also a danger sign. "Normally," he said, "when you've had a trauma, like a bruise. it hurts the worst in the first few seconds and a few hours later it doesn't hurt as much. The pain is on a decrescendo. But if you have a solution.

there was a surgical procedure or a trauma or a bruise, that's when you should seek medical care."

The reason for warning about the strep is that it can be treated with penicillin or a substitute, clindamycin, if it is recognized early, said Dr. Patrick M. Schlievert, a professor of microbiology at the University of Minnesota. Even a few days' delay may be fatal. He added that pregnant women and their fetuses sometimes get infected, and so any pregnant woman who gets a flu-like iliness should see a doctor.

The reason for warning about the strep is that it can be treated with penicillin or a substitute, clindamycin. if it is recognized early enough, said Dr. Patrick M. Schlievert, a professor of microbiology at the University of Minnesota. Even a few days' delay may be fatal.

Dr. Schlievert said cases of serious group A strep infection, which in 1990 killed Jim Henson, the creator of the Muppets, cropped up almost out of nowhere around 1987 and seemed to slack off in 1991 and 1992 for no apparent reason. And increase this year."

The bacteria that cause the disease resemble the common strep that live in almost everyone's throat and that often cause strep throats in children. But the deadly strains of these bacteria are infected with a virus that directs them to make a toxin. And it is the toxin that converts the strep bacteria from fairly benign to deadly.

Dr. Schlievert said the severe group A strep invaded areas of the hody that were already injured, like the site of a bruise, cut or surgical wound. The bacteria consume proteins and glucose, which pour out of damaged cells, he said. And once the bacteria start to attack, they can be relentless, killing or maining within

One man in Toronto, who nicked his finger sharpening his ice skates. developed a strep infection in the wound, which quickly moved up to his armpit, Schlievert said. The man felt ill for several days and went to the hospital complaining of fever. vomiting and swollen lymph nodes in his armpit. He was sent home. On the fourth day, he was admitted to the hospital, deathly ill. The bacteria had "literally eaten away all the tissue of his arm," Schlievert said, "It proceeded to eat away all the muscles on his upper arm, shoulder and back." The man died.

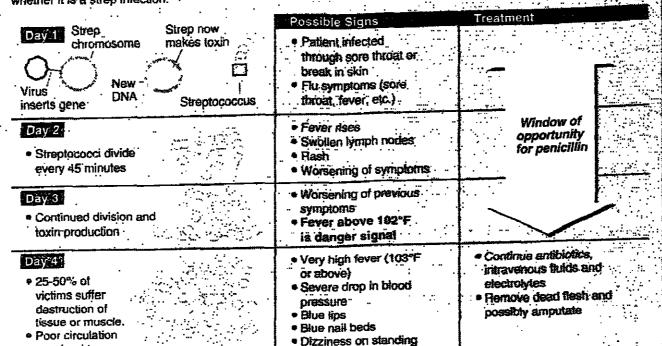

Group A strep can also infect chicken pox blisters. Dr. Schlievert said. When this happens, the child develops a fever of 101 degrees or ful or swollen areas of the body.

An outbreak of severe group A strep in Los Angeles and Orange County, Calif., last winter and spring affected 28 children with chicken pox. Five died.

Virulent group A strep was first lescribed in 1924, in an article published in The Archives of Surgery by a Dr. F.L. Meleney, who described 20 cases in China, which he treated by cutting into the infected tissue and washing it with an acid

Recognizing and Heading Off a Rare but Virulent Disease

Streptoccus A infected by a virus produces copious amounts of a foxin that is one of the most virulent lever-producing agents known. The course of an infection with this strain is variable, but there is generally a three-day period in which penicillin can head off the worst effects. Any infection with a fever of 102 degrees Fahrenheit or above in adults, swollen lymph glands, a rash and/or a sore throat is probably bacterial, and only a laboratory culture can determine whether it is a strep infection.

Clues to Minoan Volcanic Eruption

EW YORK - Ash believed to be from a great explosive eruption that buried the Minoan colony on the island of Santorini 36 centuries ago has been extracted from deep in an ice core retrieved last year from central Greenland. Its depth in the core indicated that the Aegean eruption, which may have given rise to the Atlantis legend, occurred about 1623

From the top half of the core, evidence has been found of 400 volcanic eruptions in the past 7,000 years. The ash spewed into the air was high and voluminous enough to reach Greenland, about 3,500 miles (5,600 kilometers) away. A prominent ash layer at a depth corresponding to 4803 B. C. may have come from the eruption in Oregon that destroyed Mount Mazama, leaving the giant caldera that is now Crater Lake. Results of the analysis were reported in the journal Science by Dr. Gregory A. Zielinski of the University of New Hampshire and colleagues at the university and from the Army's Cold Regions Research and Engineering Laboratory in Hanover, New Hampshire, and Pennsylvania State Univer-

Because wind systems in the Northern and Southern Hemisphere are somewhat independent, most eruptions evident in the Greenland ice have been attributed to volcanoes in the Northern Hemisphere. But there are exceptions. One in about A. D. 177 is believed to have been at Taupo, New Zealand, whose ash may have risen almost 40

Ash layers in the core have been identified by their sulfur content. Fifty-seven of 69

events recorded for the past 2,000 years were matched with known eruptions. This was true, however, of only 30 percent of the older record, to 7,000 B.C.

The Greenland core records 18 massive eruptions that took place from 7.000 to 9.000 years ago, depositing unusually heavy layers of ash. The earliest exactly dated eruption was that of Vesuvius, which destroyed Pompeil and Herculaneum in A. D. 79, preserving their precious frescoes under a blanket of ash. The same thing happened 16 centuries earlier at Santorini, which is also known as Thira. The island was buried under ash that in preserving wall paintings that document in

The demise of the Minoan civilization has long been a mystery and for many years Dr. Marinatos attributed it to ash clouds, earthquakes and tidal waves from the Santorini eruption and the collapse that formed its caldera. More precise datings, however, indicate that the Minoan decline on Crete came many years later.

The eruption, however, was clearly catastrophic and many archaeologists believe that flooding and burial of Akrotin the Santorini city, could have been the basis for Plato's account of Atlantis. Lavering in walls of the Santorini caldera show that it has been the scene of many catastrophic

LATO'S account is the primary source of the Atlantis legend. He attributed the account to Solon, an Athenian statesman of an earlier century. Many elements of the story seem improbable, such as an attack on Greece 9,000 years earlier by warriors from an island. "Atlantis." in an ocean beyond

Yet Plato's description of the destroyed island refers to many features, like the pursuit and sacrifice of sacred bulls, that were hallmarks of the Minoan civilization of Crete and Santorini.

The Atlantis invaders, said Plato, were defeated when there were "violent earthquakes and floods; and in a single day and night of misfortune all your warlike body of men in a body sank into the earth, and the island of Atlantis in like manner disappeared in the depths of the sea."

The Hot and Cold Nature of the Universe

WASHINGTON (WP) - A new supercomputer model of the universe -the most complex such simulation ever created - leads credence to the theory that the original recipe for the cosmos probably included both cold and hot versions of the mysterious ingredient known as dark matter. An astrophysics team at the University of Illinois used a parallel supercomputer to visualize the universe as it would be seen in X-rays.

which are emitted by superhot gases or in violent events. In the last decade, many astronomers came to believe that at least 98 percent of the universe consists of dark matter: invisible material of an unknown nature, detected only through the effects of its gravity. But observations soon eliminated notions that all this matter might be hotthat is, having high energy. Eventually, a model showed that a mix of celd (low-energy) and hot could explain the observed state of the cosmos.

Tracing the Origins Of Early Hunters

By John Noble Wilford New York Times Service

EW YORK - The remains of a butchered mastodon found in sediments deep below a river in Florida are surprising but strong evidence, scientists say, that people were bunting and butchering large animals in eastern North America 12,200 years ago, hundreds of years before any sign of similar activities in the West

The discovery raised questions about current ideas that the early hunters, arriving from Asia across a land bridge in what is now the Bering Strait, migrated first to the American West and later to the East. It could also undermine the hypothesis that overhunting by these newcomers swiftly drove the elephant-like mastodons, mammoths and other prehistoric animals to extinction.

A team led by David Webb, a leontologist at the University o Florida in Gainesville, found the 7and-a-half-foot (2.3-meter) mastodon tusk buried in sediments in the Aucilla River near Tallahassee. Radiocarbon testing of gourd seeds with the tusk put the age at 12,200 years, the researchers said, making t the earliest known butchering site in North America.

Six slash marks at the jaw line indicated that the tusk had been sliced out of the animal's skull by people with knives. A used flake of chert — a fine-grained, tough rock, composed mainly of silica—was found near the tusk, as were just tools and weapons with geometric inscriptions. Partly digested gasses from a mastodon's stomach well preserved in a peat-like form in sediments 30 feet under water.

This butchered mastedon took doubly significant. Dr. Webb said, "because its discovery in the eastern United States, along with other clues in the scientific record suggests that North America's first residents may have ungrated to lower latitudes through an eastern passage rather than through the Far West, as traditionally

HE earliest evidence for large game bunting in what is now the western United States has been dated at 11,500 years old. The distinctive spear points of these limiters were first identified in the 1920s near Clovis, New Mexico, and so have become known as Clows points. No weapons of this style were found at the Florida site.

An earlier presence of humans in eastern North America has been suggested by some tantalizing clues: of camp sites in Pennsylvania and Tennessee, each possibly more than 12,500 years old, and of some stone tools of that period discovered in Little Salt Springs near Sarasota, Florida.

Dr. Webb described the Aucilla findings at a recent meeting of the Society for American Archaeology.

Not that liking Fred Thomas is simple. As Dorsey warns us. Fred manipulates his friendships; any good salesperson does. In Fred's encounters you never know whether friendship is serving salesmanship or the other way around.

To make him even more interesting, Fred is torn between the old way of selling, which was to maninulate customers regardless of their needs, and a new concept of business called Total Quality Manage ment, which involves understanding what customers need.

Dorsey raises this conflict to mythic proportions by following Fred's wife, Kathy, to church one Sunday morning, where she hears a lengthy sermon on the Grail legend whose point is to identify the con-flict between mindlessly pursuing success and seeking to know of your neighbors' sorrows.

More troubling is that you are forever nagged with questions about the author's vantage point. If Dorsey was there when Fred and Kathy had one of their periodic snats, how did his presence affect their conduct? Did they pull their punches, so to speak, in deference to his project? And how did he know what Fred said when "he launched into one of his manic soliloquies" while driving back to the office after closing a sale? The false pretense of being an invisible camera's eye continues to be one of the most unsettling aspects of what used to be called the New Journalism before it got old. Still, despite such distractions. Fred's quest for his Palm Springs Grail remains highly compelling. By the time December rolls around you find yourself rooting hard for him and you share his euphoria when one of his customers says yes and all his self-doubt evaporates.

Disney Bids High On Issue's Price

PARIS - Euro Disney SCA wants to price its planned sale of new stock at 10 French francs ($2) a share - higher than most analysts expected — despite a prospectus that painted a gloomy outlook for the theme park. The Euro Disney rescue plan centers on the $1.1 billion rights issue. The exact price will come in negotiations with underwriters. At a special shareholder meeting convened at one of the park's hotels Wednesday, the company's finance director. Michael Montgomery, said shareholders would be able to subscribe to seven new shares for each two shares held.

The company's theme park near Paris, opened in 1942, had 10.5 million visitors in its first year, 500,000 fewer than expected. In the second year, the figure fell to 9.8 million, and it is running well behind even that pace now.

Euro Disney Chairman Philippe Bourguignon said the shortfall for the year ending Sept. 30 should be smaller than the company's 3900 million deficit of last year, but he made no firm estimates. Even after restructuring, Euro Disney will have $2.8 billion of consolidated debt, or nearly triple the shareholder equity. The restructuring plan, reached between Euro Disney and 61 creditor banks in March, includes forgiveness on interest payments and some fees and royalties by the Walt Disney Co., which owns 49 percent of

OECD Signs Accord With Russia

By Alan Friedman

International Herald Tribute PARIS - The world's richest industrial democracies began charting a new course toward closer economc hes in the post-Cold War era Wednesday, signing a cooperation deal with Russia and approving plans to forge new links with South Korea and four former Communist countries in Eastern Europe.

Government ministers attending the annual meeting of the 25-nation Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development hailed the accord with Russia, which calls for the OECD to help Moscow develop a market economy. Warren M. Christopher, the U.S. secretary of state, captured the sense of a new direction when he urged the group to seek "a broader role" in the world economy.

Mr. Christopher's main point, which won wide acceptance among officials at the Paris meeting, was that the OECD, with its unique abilities in economic analysis. could "be a model and an instrument of wider integration in the post-Cold War world."

In one sense, Mr. Christopher said, this was a return to the origi-nal aim of the Marshall Plan, the OECD's predecessor. He said the need was for the OECD to function not only as a forum for policy analysis but to help complete the unlinished business of postwar reconstruction at a time of accelerating economic change.

tering prices are few and risky.

This was especially apparent in the cooperation accord with Russia, signed by Foreign Minister Andrei V. Kozyrev, Mr. Kozyrev said applied for membership and is likely to join by the end of 1996. Russia would be looking to the Mr. Christopher said that a more far-reaching OECD, coupled with OECD for advice on its legal system and on rules for foreign investthe North Atlantic Treaty Organization, would "strengthen the secument, banking and privatization. Separately, Sir Leon Brittan, the European Union's trade commissioner, said talks on a cooperation deal between Russia and the EU had reached an advanced stage. Sir Leon said the text of the ac-

LONDON - The High Court on Wednesday blocked Lloyds Bank PLC's proposed £1.8 billion ($3 billion) takeover of Cheltenham & Gloucester Building Society, stopping what would have been the first merger of a British bank and a thrift association.

The judge ruled that a Lloyds plan to make cash payments to people who had held accounts with C&G for less than two years violat-ed the Building Societies Act of 1986, which governs the thrift in-

The court, however, expressed approval of such payments to account holders of more than two years' standing, holders of deposit accounts and other entitled parties. "Of course I'm disappointed." C&G's chief executive, Andrew

Longhurst, said. "I'm anxious to proceed with the transaction," he said, adding that C&G could restructure the transaction or appeal the decision.

Together, C&G and Lloyds would have had about 7 percent of the market in home mortgage lending, which would make it Britain's fourth-largest lender. This is the second time Lloyds has been thwarted in an attempt to expand through a takeover, after its bid for Midland Bank PLC in 1991.

"Obviously we can't go ahead" with the merger, said Philip Lawson, the bank's chief legal adviser. He declined to say whether there would be an appeal.

"We will need to consider the judgment carefully over the next few days before we consider appealing," Mr. Lawson said, adding that he was surprised by the decision.

If it had been approved, bank executives said, C&G's friendly merger with Britain's fifth-largest bank, part of an aggressive expansion into home mortgages, might have prompted other banks to bid for the country's 82 remaining thrifts --- which are called building

Those wishing to take over a building society would find it much easier to do so." Norman Digants. chief spokesman for the Building Societies Commission, said in discussing the prospects in a recent interview. On Wednesday, he said the com-mission, which had challenged the merger, would not comment immediately on the decision.

Many building-society executives said the merger violated the law regulating the thrifts because Lloyds was offering relatively new C&G account holders — plus mortgage holders and past and present employees — a cash bonus if they accepted the bid.

Such payouts from banks might have made it difficult for building societies to persuade their owners - the account holders - to merge with other thrifts and keep other banks from muscling in.

"Most building societies will be pleased," said Adrian Coles, a spokesman for the Building Societies Association, the industry lobby. Their understanding of the law has been upheld."

Shares in Lloyds, which had ended the day at 569 pence, up 4, were expected to fall Thursday.

"The decision dictates a sharp price fall, between 20 pence and 30 pence," said Tim Clarke, a banking-industry analyst at Panmure Gordon & Co.

If the decision had gone in favor of Lloyds, Mr. Clarke said, the share price could have risen as much as 10 pence immediately.

Lloyds shares rose as much as 10 percent when the bid was announced in April. Under terms of the Lloyds offer, l million savings-account holders at C&G would have each received £500 cash payments plus sums equal to 10 percent of their deposits, up to a maximum of £10,000. On average, that would have come

Calm Before Vote in U.K. Markets Braced for Conservative Defeat

By Erik Ipsen

LONDON - A calm has descended on financial markets on the eve of what is widely expected to be another severe drubbing for the governing Conservative Party in elections for the European Parliament on Thursday.

"The possibility of the Conservatives doing disastrously is already discounted to death," said Andrew Bell, equity strategist for Barclays de Zoete Wedd. With 87 seats at stake, even the most optimistic poll estimates that the Tories will win only about 20. Others say they might be lucky to keep two.

Results will be announced late Sunday. "The range of possibilities runs from bad to awful for the Conservatives," said Ruth Lea, an economist for Lehman Brothers.

But, analysts point out, the advance publicity has been so had that the possibility of a surprisingly good showing — which would be expected to buoy the markets — now looms large. Strategists in the London financial district said that if the Conservatives managed to win 20 or more seats, the markets could bounce back strongly.

British stocks were sharply higher Wednesday, with the Financial Times-Stock Exchange 100 index rising 33.4 points, to 3.038.2.

[AFP-Extel News reported that prices were supported by a statement from Alan Greenspan, chairman of the U.S. Federal Reserve Board, that U.S. inflation was "clearly restrained." British investors also took heart from April industrial production data, which showed a rise of 1.6 percent from March, exceeding market expectations.]

Even the currency markets, which are notoriously sensitive to any hint of political risk, look set to take even the worst outcome for the Conservatives

Neil MacKinnon, chief currency strategist for Citibank, said talk of a post-election currency crisis was "off the wall." He said that hast month the pound weathered local elections in which the Conservatives won only 27 percent of the vote, the party's worst showing since World War II.

Many analysts predict that even if the Conservatives won only as many as seven seats, the markets might take heart. Under this reasoning, such a showing would force the party to dump Prime Minister John Major, whose standing in the polls is the worst for a prime minister in 50 years.

"Quite a few people in the market would like to see Major replaced fairly quickly with someone who is more electable. said Peter Fellner, a British government-bonds strategist for NatWest Markets. They view any result that gives John Major a new lease on life as not the best outcome."

The absence of a clear successor to Mr. Major however, throws that scenario into doubt. The chancellor of the Exchequer. Kenneth Clark, is increasingly seen as too pro-European to pass muster with the party's right wing, while the Board of Trade president, Michael Heseltine, who had a heart attack last year, is hobbled by concern over his health after the sudden death last month of the Labor Party leader John Smith, from a heart

EU Backs Plastics Venture

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches BRUSSELS — The European Commission said Wednesday in had approved a proposed $6.0 billion polypropylene joint wenture between the plastics units of Mon-tedison SpA and Royal Dutch/ Shell Group on the condition that certain key technology would remain outside the partnership. The commission said the two parties agreed last week that Montedison should retain control over its own specialized polypropylene technology. Montedison also has agreed to withdraw from its Montelina polypropylene-production joint venture with Petrofina SA, the commission said.

The new company, to be called Montell Polyolefins, will become the world's biggest manufacturer of polypropylene, a hardened plastic used in the making car parts such as bumpers and racks as well as other industrial products.

Racal's Earnings Delight Market Bloomberg Business News

LONDON — Investors greeted Racal Electronics PLC's earnings report for the latest financial year by bidding the company's stock price up 5 percent Wednesday.

Although pretax profit at the provider of electronic and communication services fell 45 percent, to £26.4 million ($40 million), that figure included £25.4 million in losses from asset sales and discontinued operations, up from charges of £10.9 million for similar items a year earlier. Without the one-time charges, pretax profit was about £51.7 million, at the top end of analysis expectations. Racal stock rose 11 pence on the day, closing at 249 pence. Racal said its data-communications business would have a profit margin of more than 5 percent on sales of more than £400 million this year, up from less than I percent on sales of £373.8 million in the latest year.

Split on HDTV Undermines Japan's Show

By Steven Brull nal Herald Tribune

TOKYO - Broadcast engineers at research laboratories of NHK. Japan's publicly funded radio and television network, took advantage of their annual open house Wednesday to show off some of their snazziest technologies, built for the coming era of interactive digital high-definition television.

There was only one snag: Top executives at the network refuse to pull the plug on their existing analog HDTV system until well into the next decade.

But what counts for view- Japan ought to consider dropping ers is the content of our broadcasts. analog HDTV in favor of an allnot the type of transmission technology we use."

Engineers, of course, are more interested in hardware and were picased to present their latest digi-

Included was technology that added a digital data channel to Japan's analog HDTV format, called MUSE, allowing it to become a multimedia system delivering still pictures, text and sound in addition to the main television program.

The system, however, is limited by the fact that MUSE is delivered by satellite and so cannot offer real-time interactive capability, unlike a system based on cable deliv-

There was also a prototype system for ground-based digital transmission robust enough to deliver a clear signal from a moving vehicle. It will not be ready until around 2010, a timetable dictated by government planning, which sees the present system in place at least until 2007. The technology, developed in tandem with NEC Corp., would have immediate application for coverage of marathon races and other such events. The technical strides and limitations in their application reflect the close ties of NHK and Japan's electronics companies, which have staked billions of dollars to develop the analog system over the past 30

"They want to put it to the consumer and come back 10 years later with a new product," said Peter Wolff, a technology analyst at CS First Boston (Japan) Ltd. "The history of technology is littered with products developed for no purpose.
MUSE could be an amusing exam-

> NHK's view that an all-digital format is not worth the wait also reflects the expectation that the development of commercially viable broadcast and consumer equipment will take longer than support ers of the technologies have said.

But Mr. Morikawa's comment that viewers are unconcerned with whether their TV programming is delivered by digital or analog means assumes that the consume is not eager for interactivity. The main advantage of an all-digital system is that it can be integrated more easily with computers.

NHK's commitment to an analog system also highlights what many see as a competitive chasm between NHK and Nippon Telegraph & Telephone Corp., Japan's main tele-phone company, which is eager to wire the country with liber-optic cables and advance into multimedia.

NTT said Wednesday it would link up with Silicon Graphics Inc. of the United States to develop interactive hardware and services such as video on demand, home shopping and long-distance education and medical consultations. Testing would start in early 1995.

Wang Spin-Off: Screens Call Taiwan Company Maps Specialization Plan

YANGMEI, Taiwan - President Technology

Inc., which emerged last year from the shell of the American computer company Wang Laboratories Inc., plans to stake its future on making monitors. the company's president said Wednesday.

"We will emphasize the monitor business only." said John Cheng, who became president in a man-agement shuffle last month. He said he would submit a business plan to directors Saturday. President Technology hopes to manufacture

60,000 monitors a month by the end of the year, up from 12,000 at present, Mr. Cheng said. The push into the competitive monitor business by the company — an alliliate of President Enter-prises Corp., which produces noodles, flour and other foods — is full of risk, analysts said. But President may have few other choices.

"They decided to go into the monitor busines because it was relatively easy to enter," said Derek Tien, an electronics-industry analyst with Baring Securities in Taipei. "Yet just about everyone is going into the monitor business, and we feel there is going to be a glut."

President Technology, formerly Wang Laboratories (Taiwan) Ltd., has faced troubles since it was acquired by President Enterorises and several affiliates in March 1993, analysts said.

President Enterprises currently owns 19 percent of President Technology, according to Su Yichung, a spokesman for the food company.

Wang Laboratories (Taiwan) as recently as 1989 was selling $200 million annually of minicomputers, personal computers, power supplies and monitors, mostly to Wang customers overseas.

Seeing what seemed a good prospect, President Enterprises and its affiliates took a 30 percent stake in Wang's Taiwan manufacturing subsidiary in 1990 in hopes of listing the company on the Taiwan Stock Exchange.

Instead, they ended up with shrinking assets when the U.S. company entered Chapter 11 bank-ruptcy-law protection in August 1992.

The Taiwan investors in 1993 took over all of Wang Laboratories (Tarwan) and changed the name to President Technology Inc.

While Wang Laboratories emerged from Chap ter 11 in September 1993, things got off to a rough start for the Taiwan concern. Its sales fell to less than $50 million last year from $144 million in 1992 amid shrinking business from its former American parent. Efforts to develop notebook computers and other new item also failed to generate quick sales or profit.

The replacement of President James Liu with Mr. Cheng last month was seen as a sign that the investors were about the company's prospects. President Technology does not plan to halt computer production entirely, but it will switch virtually all its resources to sales and production of monitors, Mr. Cheng said. Six executives have been added to help with the new thrust, he said. The company sees "three of four years of expansion in monitor sales, and I have the working capital available to build up production enough to compete on price, Mr. Cheng said. Under his plan, the company will produce 14-inch, 15-inch and 17-inch color monitors by the end of the year, to be sold to large overseas customers that can put their own brand names on the monitors. Whether President will succeed, analysis said. depends on how quickly it can form relationships with these prospective overseas customers.

Price competition among existing suppliers is intense, yet many are gearing up to expand output this year and next. Mr. Tien of Baring said.

President's plan to make 60,000 monitors a month represents a "very aggressive" goal, he said.

Hanoi Asks Study on Gas Output

HANOI - Vietnam has appointed a foreign consortium to study the feasibility of a $400 million plan to launch an offsbore gas industry, a spokesman for one of the foreign companies said

/ednesday. British Gas PLC, Mitsui & Co. of Japan and TransCanada Pipe-Lines Ltd. were named to conduct the study in partnership with the state oil company PetroVietnam, a spokesman for British Gas said.

If the idea is adopted, the companies would form a joint venture to implement the first major project, using gas that is currently burned off during oil production at the Bach Ho field in the South China Sea, Vietnam's only operating crude-oil field.

Hyundai Heavy Industries Co. of South Korea began work in April on a 124-kilometer (77-mile) pipeline to bring the gas ashore, the first phase of the project.

The feasibility study on the sec ond phase, to build onshore facilities and pipelines to take the gas to Ho Chi Minh City, is expected to take 12 to 16 weeks. Vietnam currently has no gas in-dustry apart from a small field in the Hanoi basin in the north, but industry sources say there is considerable long-term potential in the oil fields in the South China Sea. An estimated 3 million cubic meters (105 million cubic feet) of gas is burned off each day at Bach Ho, and some companies prospecting for oil in other offshore fields have

Rangers Within a Victory of First Cup in 54 Years

By Helene Elliott Los Angeles Times Service

VANCOUVER, Canada -Their paths were intertwined, the two young stars who carried their teams to the Stanley Cup finals. For several memorable moments, the New York Rangers' defenseman Brian Leetch and the Vancouver Canucks' right wing Pavel Bure reached new heights until Leetch took the Rangers a giant step down the path to their first Cup in 54

Leetch sparked a rally on Tuesday night with his 10th goal of the playoffs and set up three more as the Rangers got a 4-2 victory that gave them a 3-1 lead in the four-ofseven-game final round.

Only the 1942 Toronto Maple Leafs have ever rallied from a 3-1 deficit to win the Cup, and if the Canucks are to duplicate that, they must start by winning in Madison Square Garden on Thursday night.

"The place is going to be a mad-house," said the Rangers coach. Mike Keenan. "The fan support is bordering on fanatical." Leetch also figured in a pivotal play for the Canucks by pulling down Bure on a breakaway that resulted in a penalty shot. Bure. who had set up Vancouver's second goal, had his shot stopped by Mike Richter's right leg and was not heard from again.

"I can't do a lot of the things Pavel can, so I just look for opportunities," Leetch said.

But there seemed to be little Leetch could not do in this game. Trevor Linden's re-direction of Jyrki Lumme's shot from the slot at 13:25 gave the Canucks their first power-play goal of the series, and Cliff Ronning banged in the re-bound of Bure's shot at 16:19 as the Canucks took a 2-1 lead.

When the Vancouver goalie, Kirk McLean, made a glove save on Leetch on a breakaway at 18:43, the game seemed to belong to the Canucks. But the Rangers clawed back, first on Leetch's long goal through a screen at 4:03 of the second period.

Then Leetch pulled Bure down and the referee, Terry Gregson. pointed to center ice, signaling a penalty shot. "It was a good call."

Bure tried the same move he had used against Calgary's Mike Vernon in Vancouver's first-round series. He scored a double-overtime goal against Vernon, but could not get past Richter.

"He came out from the net, and that's why I couldn't shoot," said Bure, who skated in on Richter and tried to slip a forehand shot past the goalie from about five feet

Richter got his right toe on the puck, no more than that.

The penalty shot was the seventh ever taken in the finals. None have been successful.

Budig Election Set As AL's President

CINCINNATI - The American League was to get a new president on Wednesday. with the league's club owners set to elect Gene Budig, the chancellor of the University of Kansas, to succeed Bobby Brown.

Reports of Budig's impending election surfaced six weeks ago, and the search committee was to recommend him at the league meeting on Wednesday. But the main business of the day was to be the labor proposal that probably will lead to a strike during the second half of the season. Management's negotiator, Richard Ravitch, was to inform all owners in the afternoon of the details of the salary cap plan he intends to give to the Major League Baseball

Players Association next week. The owners agreed in January sharing - if there was a cap included. The players have consistently maintained they won't accept a salary cap and seem prepared to strike over the issue. After getting the proposal next Tuesday, they will meet Thursday in Chicago to consider the plan. Then on July 11, they're expected to set a firm strike date, probably in early

Because the old collective bargaining agreement expired Dec. 31, players fear that vners will declare an impasse in bargaining and unilaterally implement a salary cap after the season, when the union has less leverage.

He walked none and struck out seven with a fastball clocked at 98 miles an hour. He also hit an RBI single - moments after an unusual strike call - and helped himself by flawlessly handling five fielding chances.
"I feel so great tonight, I feel like a giant out there," Martinez said. "I feel like nobody can hit me." The victory in Miami stopped the Dodgers' four-game losing streak and snapped the Marlins' longest winning string at five. But Dave Weathers of the Marlias threw one pitch that no one could have hit. When Raul Mondesi was slow to leave the on-deck circle in the second inning, the plate umpire. Joe West, told Weathers to throw. Weathers made a pitch without Mondesi in the batter's boy and West - following baseball rules - automatically called it a strike. give you a "fatfree" world Not to mention the myriad of diet drinks with all the necessary vitamins to make you healthy and

When you Buchwald leave this university you will have a choice of thousands of shampoos, moisturizscreens, and perfumes so powerful that you will become irresistible to the opposite sex.

Wait, there's more. At this very moment you can purchase the car of your choice with no money down and 48 months to pay, not includ-ing tags, taxes and delivery charges.

As you walk around this great nation of ours you will notice store after store window painted white with large signs reading "For Lease" or "For Rent." We are leaving you all of them. Other stores "Going Out of Business."

Everybody declaring bankruptcy looks to your generation to bail them out with taxpayers' money. What else do we have for you? Go to any department store or shopping mall and we will give you a 50 percent discount plus 25 per-cent off the price marked on the tag. This offer is good until Satur-

Redesign at Windsor Castle

Agence France-Presse LONDON - Five of the nine rooms in Windsor Castle that were damaged by fire in 1992 will be entirely redesigned by the Sidell Gibson Partnership architectural firm, Buckingham Palace said Wednesday. Restoration work is scheduled to end in mid-1998.

We are offering you something that no other generation has ever had - you can now win $40 million in the state lottery. All you have to do is pick the right seven numbers, which should not be a problem, particularly if you are good at math.

Wait, there's more. Because we believe in you, we will provide health insurance to you at a price you can afford — with a $5,000 deductible

Our generation is so proud of what your generation has accom-plished. If you hadn't bought CDs with our money, God knows where the American music industry would be today. Your devotion to rock music and concerts is the difference between a stagnant and

So the moment has come. As you accept your diploma remember that more than ever before your success depends on whether you ear Nikes or Reeboks.

My biggest hope for you this morning is that, when you are out in the cold world on your own, the person who delivers your Domino's pizza takes more than 30 minutes, so that you will not have to pay for

I also pray that whatever headache relief vou take will act twice as fast as the one you took in the past. Good luck. God bless and, if you have thank-you notes to write for your graduation gifts, do it fast before the U.S. postage rates go

Looking Out: An Arab Feminist's Vision

By Mark Kurlansky

PARIS—When the Moroccan feminist Fatima Mernissi was working on her doctorate at Brandeis University in the early 1970s, her contacts with American feminists were strained. She was criticized for her red lipstick and blue mascara and jangling silver jewelry. They pointed out that this was simply responding to corpo-rate advertising, making a woman part of a product sales.

Though it was seldom understood, Mernissi would try to explain, "But, you see, I come from a culture where women were not allowed to wear makeup."

Being a feminist is slightly different it you were born in Fez in 1940 and raised within the well-kept, closely guarded gate of a harem. The daughter of a woman who could neither read nor write. Fatima Mernissi is a sociologist at the University Mo-hammed V in Rabat. Her sixth book, Dreams of Trespass: Tales of a Harem Girlhood," has just been published in the United States. And not only does she wear makeup and wondrous arrays of jewelry along with clothes that show a Moroccan flair for blending impossible colors like fuchsia. scarlet and orange, but she is perfectly happy to have men hold doors for her. "I came from a place where women held doors

Her book is a reminiscence of her child-hood in a Fez harem told through the eyes of a young girl. Written in the Arab story-telling tradition, it is only loosely based on her own experience. "My childhood was not as nice as this," she said.

Though she portrays harem life with a picturesque charm, she has not forgotten its oppression. Her book is called "Dreams of Trespass" because that is what she remembers women doing in a harem, looking at a square of sky in the countyard and dreaming of simple things like walking freely in the street. She writes of the concept of hudud, sacred boundaries that prescribe behavior in a society - the line between men and women, for example, "Education is to know the hudud," one woman tells the

There is some bitterness. When the women learn that in Europe, which they call "snowland," the Nazis were requiring Jews to wear a yellow star, it was reasoned by the harem women that, "The Allemane forced the Jews to wear something yellow whenever they stepped out into the streets, just as the Muslim men asked the women to wear a veil, so they could be spotted immediately.

Mernissi makes a distinction between "imperial" and "domestic" harems. Westerners usually imagine imperial harems that were palaces owned by wealthy, powerful men who bought hundreds of women slaves and kept them cloistered and guarded by emuchs. These harems had disappeared by World War I, when the Ottoman Empire was dismantled and the Western conquerors outlawed the practice.

Mernissi, on the other hand, was raised in a domestic harem that was an elegant wailed house, but not a palace, and was inhabited by a large extended family with the intention of keeping women from hav-ing contact with the outside world. Some mestic harems still exist in the Gulf states, although the nationalist movement that won Moroccan independence ended the harem practice in her country. Today these beautiful tiled homes of Fez are dilapidated and either abandoned or inhabited by squatters who have migrated from rural

The women who were intended to live there, like Memissi, went on to be educated modern Arab women living in the outside

"I am so lucky," said Mernissi, in Paris recently for a writers conference. "If I had been born two years earlier. I would have had no education. I came at just the right time." Her book is filled with the excitement of that time, the dream and promise of Arab nationalism. Her mother, who spent her life in a harem with no education, was a nationalist and because of that, wanted her children to go to school. These women cut off from the world had the capacity to smell ideas," she said.

The nationalists, who were fighting the French, had promised to create a new Morocco, with equality for all. Every woman was to have the same right to education as a man, as well as the right to enjoy monogamy," she wrote. Her father and uncle took only one wife each because they were na-

A great deal of "Dreams of Trespass" is about women smelling ideas and teaching their daughters how to do it and teaching them how to survive as women. "You have to learn to scream and protest, just the way you learned to walk and talk," her mother told her. The point of "A Thousand and One Nights," the classic tale of Scheherazade, who was not decapitated by the king because she kept him (ascinated with her stories, was summed up when the young girl in Mernissa's book cried, "'But how does one learn how to tell stories which please kings? Mother mumbled, as if talking to herself, that that was a woman's lifetime

Mernissi acknowledges that many of the dreams of Arab nationalism have not been realized. Polygamy has not been banned. women have not achieved equal status to men and democracy is not the prevailing system in the Arab world. She is both an outspoken critic and an outspoken admirer of the Islamic world. Her doctoral thesis, Beyond the Veil: Male-Female Dynamics in Modern Muslim Society" is a well-known textbook in the United States. "The Veil and the Male Elite," though banned in her native Morocco, is widely read in the Arab world. There is even a pirated Arab edition in Syria.

In her writing she has tried to demonstrate that the shortcomings of Arab rule are not intrinsic to religious teaching, that the Islamic religion is manipulated by people in power for their own purposes. She teaches that you must always ask about the agenda of the person who is speaking in the name of Islam. "If you hear someone talk about a holy war," she said, "that means that someone is trying to make the war

Islam is a religion with a complicated literature that lends itself to such manipulation. There is so much of this that she writes of "a need to create a science for the detection of fabricated tradition." The repression of women, she believes, is just such a fabricated tradition. She belongs to a North African women's group, which has published a book collecting Islamic religious teachings that endorse women's rights.

"If people want to scavenge Islam to find the verses and teachings that support wom-en's rights, they can find them. But who is looking for them?" she said.

Mernissi has been scavenging Islam for some time but in her newest book she has put aside the academic debate about Islamic teachings and written about her own life.
To her, feminism is not so much about how a woman dresses or even what a religion teaches. To have been born in a harem and become a respected international academic is in itself a message. She said it very simply, "However constrained a person you are, you can always have a dream and a vision. If you hang on to it, you can change the world. That is my story."

Mark Kurlansky's most recent book, on European Jewry, will be published this year.

Pierce Brosnan Selected As James Bond No. 5

Pierce Brosnan, a steely-eved Irishman known for his action roles, will be the new James Bond. In 1986, Brosnen was prominently mentioned as the next 007 but missed out when NBC revived the previously canceled "Remington Steele," the TV series Brosnan starred in. At that time Timothy Dalton got the Bond role, following in the footsteps of Seau Connery, George Lazemby and Roger Moore. Dalton, who played Bond in two films, gave up the job this spring.

The biographer Nigel Hamilton said he has given up plans for a second volume about John F. Kennedy because of interference from the Kennedy family, according to The Boston Globe. The author ruffled the family's feathers mightily two years ago with his sex-obsessed best-seller, TFK: Reckless Youth.

Carol Schneider, publicity director for Pandon V. for Random House, Hamilton's publisher, said the second volume was shelved because there are too many Kennedy books already.

The comedian Jackie Mason says he is returning his Tony beon this year's awards show. Mason is appearing in New York in "Jack-ic Mason — Politically Incorrect." He received a special Tony in 1987 for an earlier one man show on Broadway. A Tony spokesman, Keith Sherman, said the show's producer had to be selective.

There were a lot of stars who asked to be on the chem? he said asked to be on the show," he said.

Jack Palance, Billy Crystal and other stars of "City Stickers II" attended the movie's premiere in Atlanta to benefit former president Januay Carter's inner-city Atlanta Project Crystal joked that a third "City Slickers" is being planned: "It's going to be subtitled 'Besting a Dead Horse."

The National Symphony Or-chestra in Washington will give a farewell concert on June 17 for Mstislav Rostropovich, who is leaving after 17 years as music director.
